Malcolm entered legal practice after working 30 years in the chemical, automotive and steel and aluminium industries. Before becoming a lawyer, Malcolm's career ranged from being an industrial chemist through various sales, technical and marketing roles throughout the Asia/Pacific region. In his final six years in industry, he was an executive with a multi-national chemical company, running the business in Australia and engaging with the company's Asian businesses and customers.

Malcolm brings extensive practical experience in all aspects of business in Australia and Asia - intellectual property, licensing and distribution agreements and trade practices matters. His industry background has proven invaluable when giving advice to companies grappling with the complexities of running both domestic and international business.
